

Alessia Cedola, Italian citizen, received in 1999 the PhD degree at the University " Joseph Fourier" in Grenoble (France), summa cum laude, with an experimental thesis by the European Synchrotron Radiation Facility (ESRF). She is currently permanent scientist of the National Research Council (CNR) at Institute of Nanotechnology in Rome. She is qualified Full Professor of Experimental Physics. She is responsible of the X-ray physics group at the Institute of Nanotechnology -CNR in Rome; Member of two Management Committees of the European Science Foundation Project COST, of several Scientific Committees of International conferences on physics, of the Editorial Board of the Journal `Scientific Reports –Nature`.

Responsible of: past national projects financed by INFN; one Marie Skłodowska-Curie Individual Fellowships; one H2020 FET-Open; one scientific platform of Italian regional project.

She presently works on X-ray imaging, X-ray Phase Contrast Tomography for biomedical applications. She received several invitations to deliver invited, keynote and plenary talks at international conferences. She has more than 130 publications with more than 2000 citations (H index 24).